THE ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN

Compiled by Fred Shay

First broadcast in 1938 on some out of the way radio stations for a trial period, then brought back on February 12, 1940, as a thrice-a-week juvenile serial. Mutual never realized at the time how popular the show was and discontinued the program on March 9, 1942. The public, by submitting thousands of letters, convinced Mutual executives to continue the program. The series was revived on August 31, 1942 as a five-a-week, fifteen-minute series and continued through till February 4, 1949. During the war years (1943-45), the menace went from comic book heroes to Japanese and Germans. Bud Collyer was Superman throughout the entire run. Superman was broadcast on Mutual as a syndicated serial until Kellogg's Pep began sponsoring the series on January 4, 1943. Pep continued until the end of 1946; the series returned sustaining. Batman and Robin first appeared on March 1, 1945 and were on the show many times until the end of its run.

THE ADVENTURES OF SUPERMAN

Compiled by Fred Shay

Beginning February 7, 1949, Superman underwent a few noticeable changes - now broadcast on ABC as a thrice a week presentation - with the exception of late 1950, when the series broadcasted twice a week. The fifteen-minute program expanded to full thirty-minutes. Although many of the half-hour episodes were originals, about half of them were abridged adaptations of the serial adventures previously performed over the airwaves. Example: Episode six is actually an abridged adaptation of the July 22, 1941 to August 29, 1941 adventure. Bud Collyer was still playing the role of the alien superhero until June 6, 1950, when the role was handed over to Michael Fitzmaurice. An interesting tidbit: Superman's popularity appealed overseas when, during the 1950's, The Adventures of Superman began originating from Australia with Leonard Teale in the title role.
